cases do go to trial, it is usually due to one or more of the following circumstances. One Or Both Sides Decides To Take A Risk. As mentioned above, going to trial is a risk for both plaintiffs and defendants. Neither side typically wants to go to trial because that takes the outcome of their case out of their hands and puts it into a jury or judge's hands.

When Do Personal Injury Cases Go To Trial?

A large majority of personal injury claims settle before trial. If you agree to accept a settlement, you will be required to sign an agreement stating you absolve the other party of all further liability in this case. If the case goes to trial, the trial can either be by jury, or a bench trial.
